florida southern college

A college is a place of higher learning devoted to the development of human beings. Books, classes, students, and professors work as a unit to make up the educational process of a college. Relating and interpreting thoughts, each individual becomes part of the college whole; yet as the individual develops his own philosophy, a separation occurs.

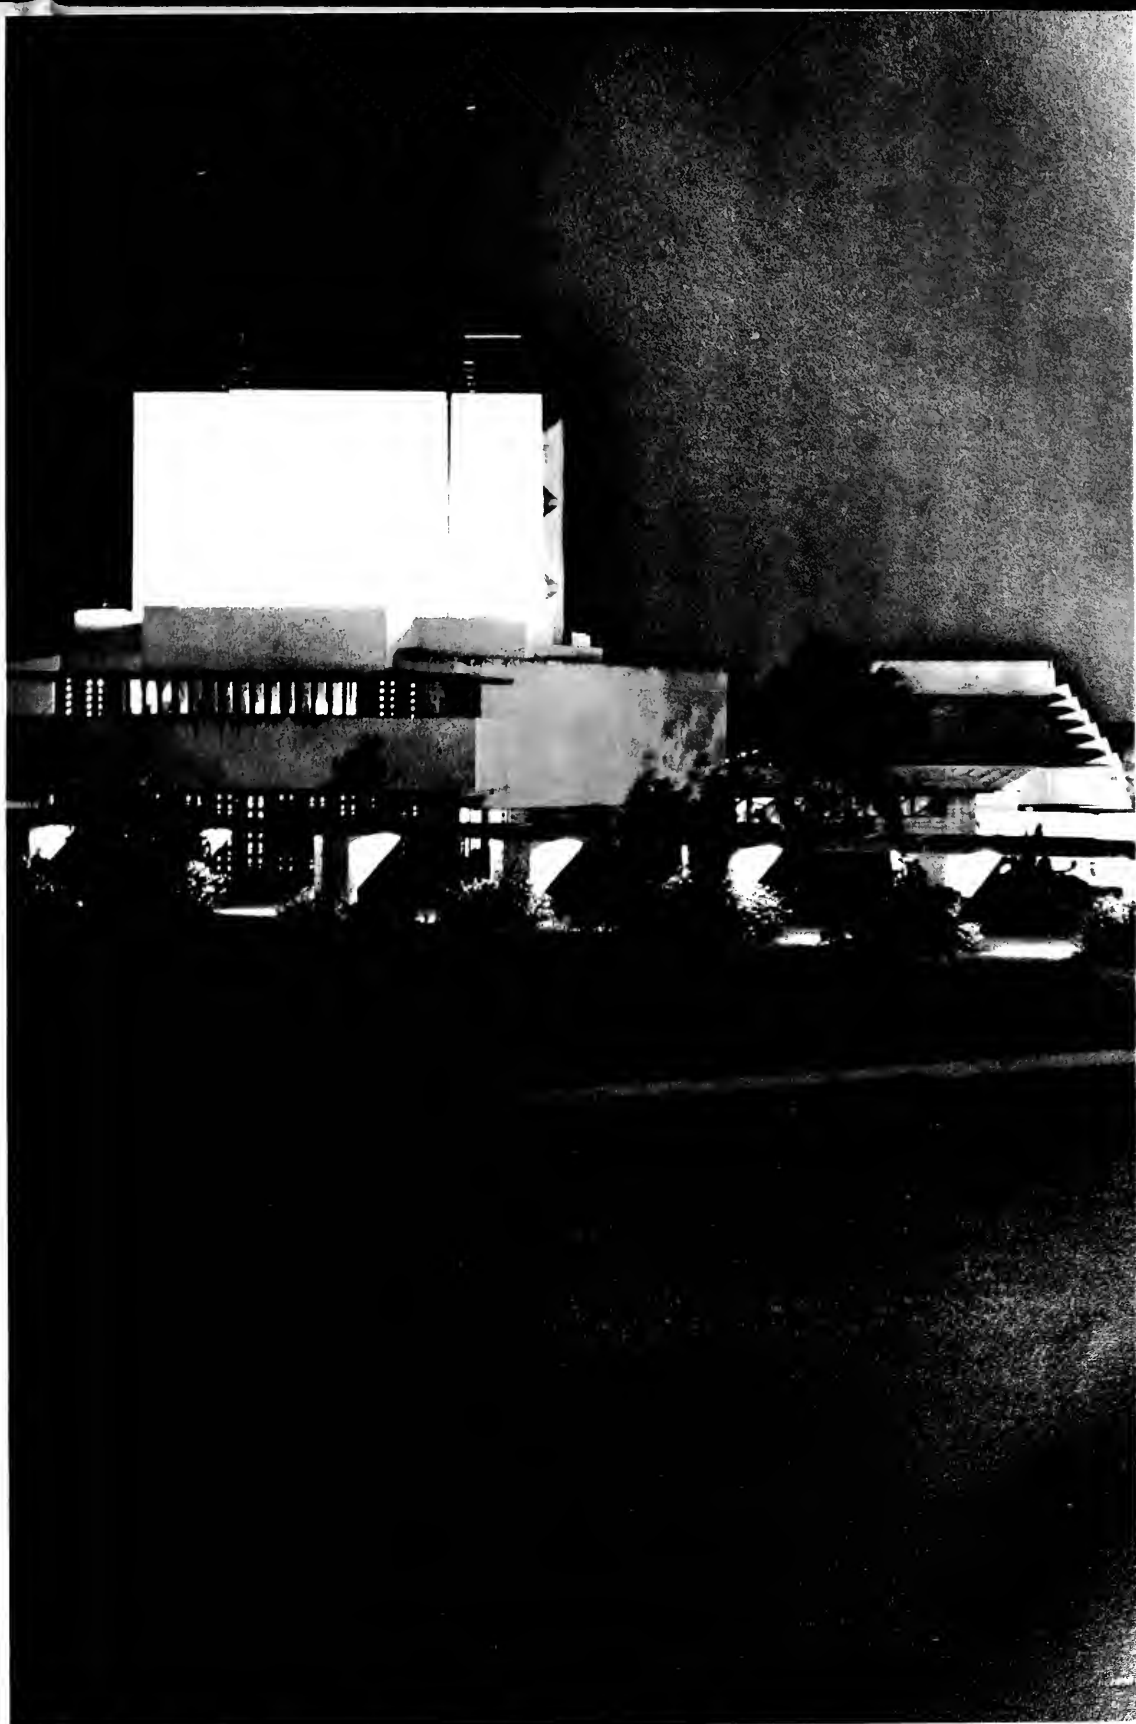

Involvement in self-discovery and self-expression removes the student from total participation in the whole to a niche all his own. Alone one is committed to self-instruction.

The inspiration of plans and dreams lights the way through the college year. The path has very few shadows. With hopeful outlooks, all follow their own guiding light which signals the beginning of a new life.

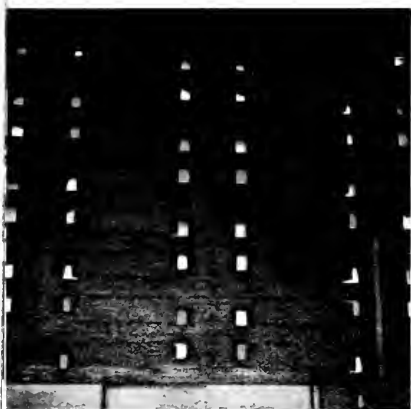

By following the light one remains close to nature; growth is not always contained in buildings but in the beauty that nature reflects.

A college is based on relationships, relationships which influence each one's personality. Professors and students also share a very special type of association; each learns from the other. Ever seeking truth, student and professor strive to understand each other's views.

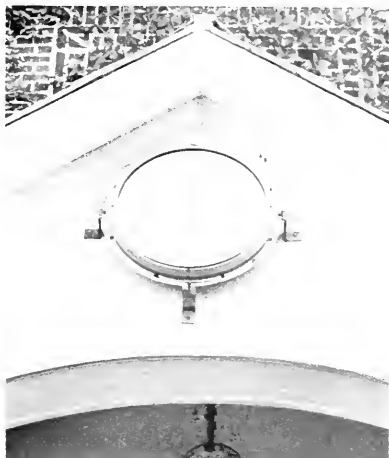

Reminiscing days past, one can look back at his accomplishments with pride hoping that the future will hold equally high achievements. Through meditation each one learns much about himself and his own impressions about others. One's moods change seasonally thus keeping one fresh and alive for tomorrow's tasks and adventures.

For many it is a time of love and commitment mixed with happiness and understanding. For others it is a time of slight confusion.

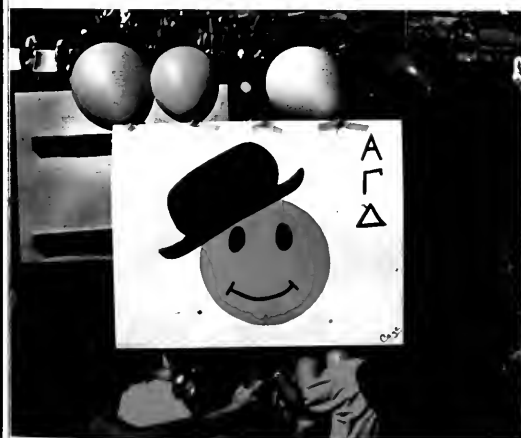

It is also a time of creativity when each student offers something of himself in a tangible sense. It is a time to ponder one's thoughts.

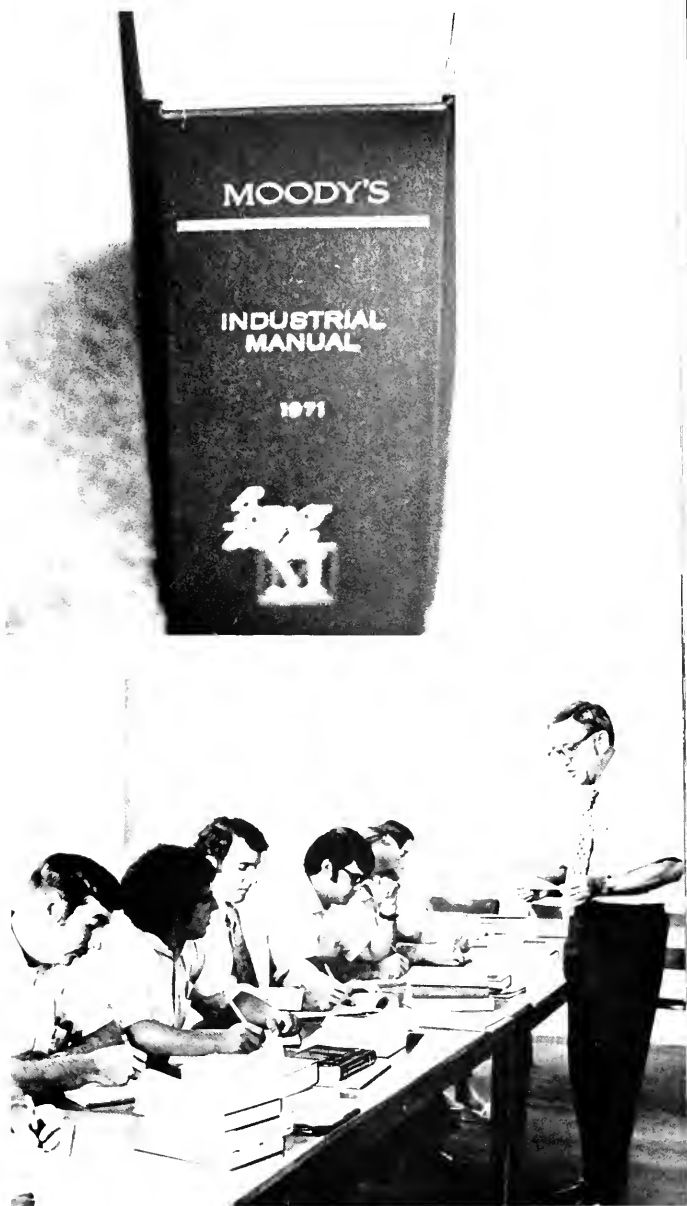

Each happiness and each sorrow can be shared with friends daily, and fun can be found at every crossroad. Along with friends, however, the individual is still reflected in all phases of college life.

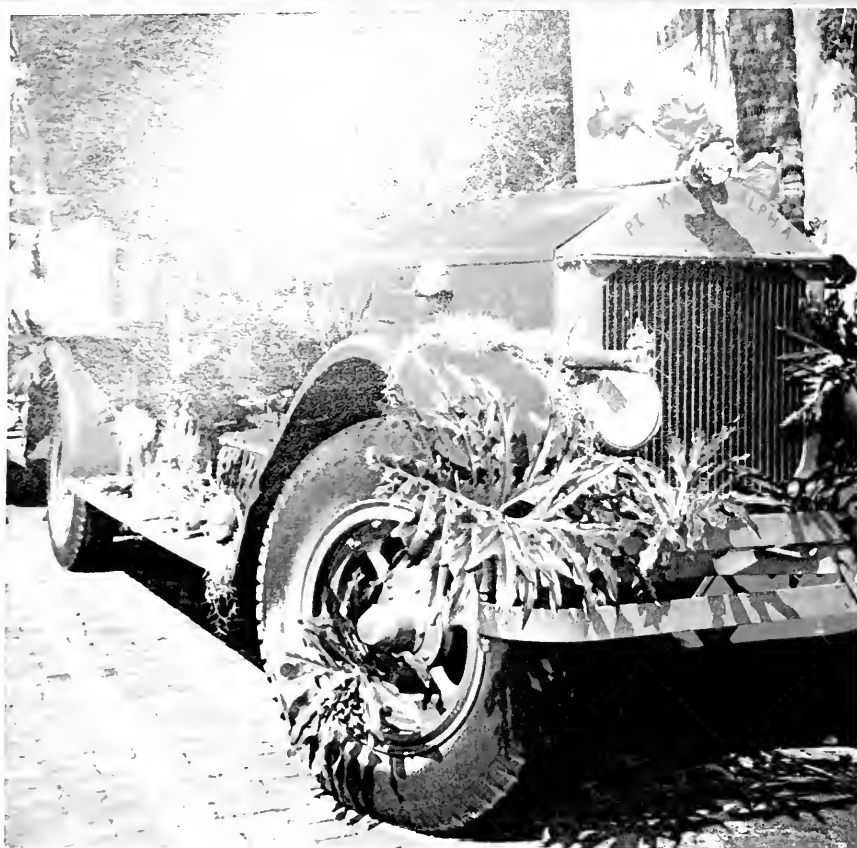

A college is a proving ground for the great, the near-great and just plain people. Each one displays his own talent within the college; thus adding to part of the whole. His giving and that of others contributes to every aspect of the college. Each becomes a "star" in his own right for his vital role of action.

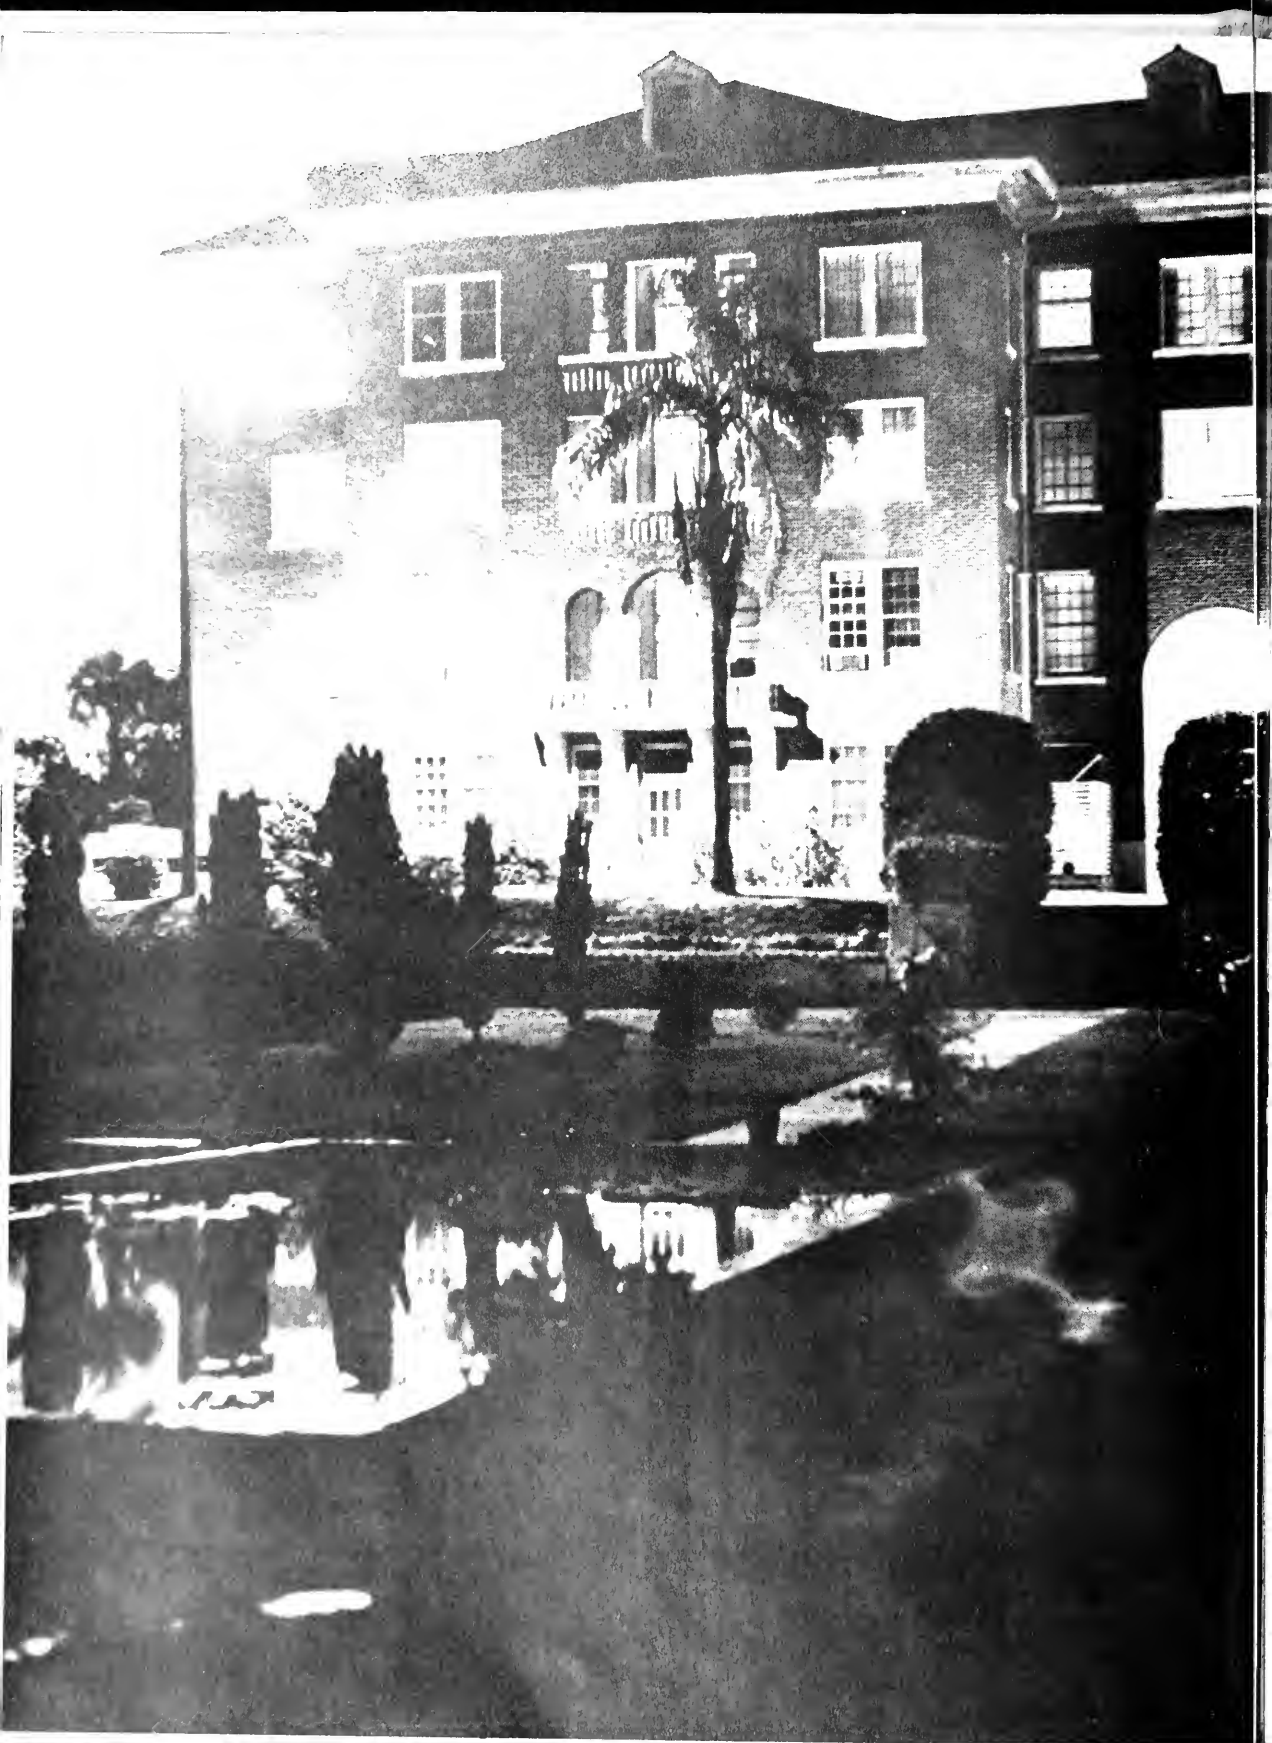

Involvement in fun is seen at every turn, always and ever changing; open to all who want to join and to all who want to add their love of life to everything they see.

The end of one day celebrates the forthcoming of another . . .

And an introduction to a new "world."

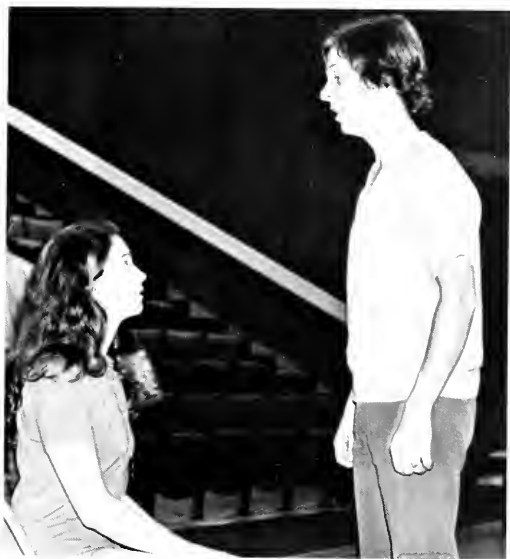

*The fascination of making new friends,
The warmth of finding the old ones . . .*

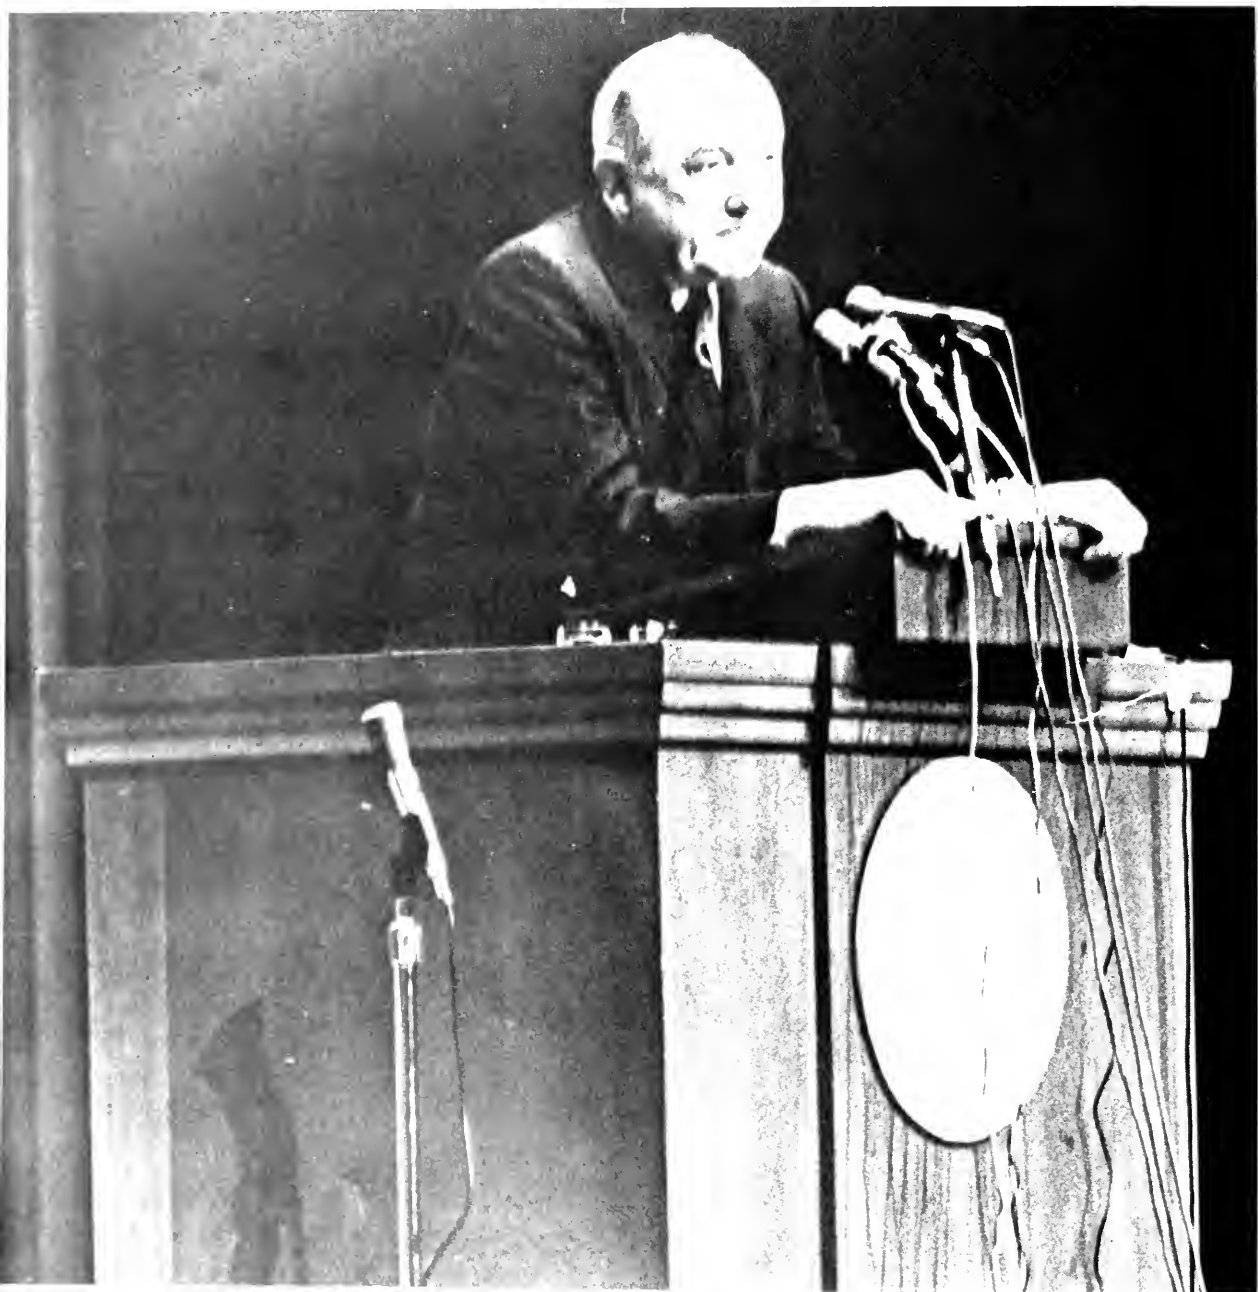

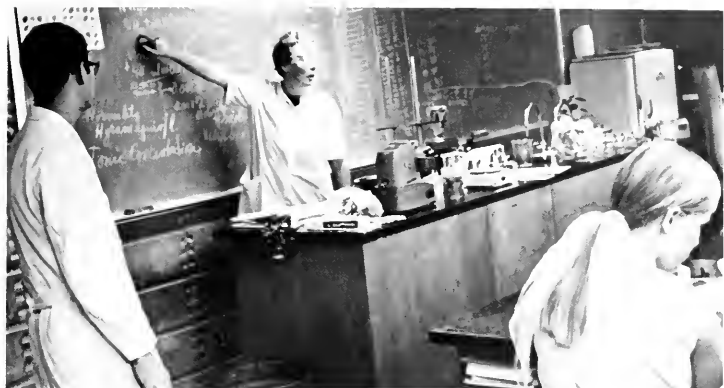

*And then the fun begins
for both the onlooker and the doer. . .*

This isn't really a country club by the lake . . .

*Progress lies in the individual's hands —
The best development is from within the self . . .*

*Expression in eyes face
and body...*

Reflection of one's self through a parade of talents.

Each evening can be an opening night . . .

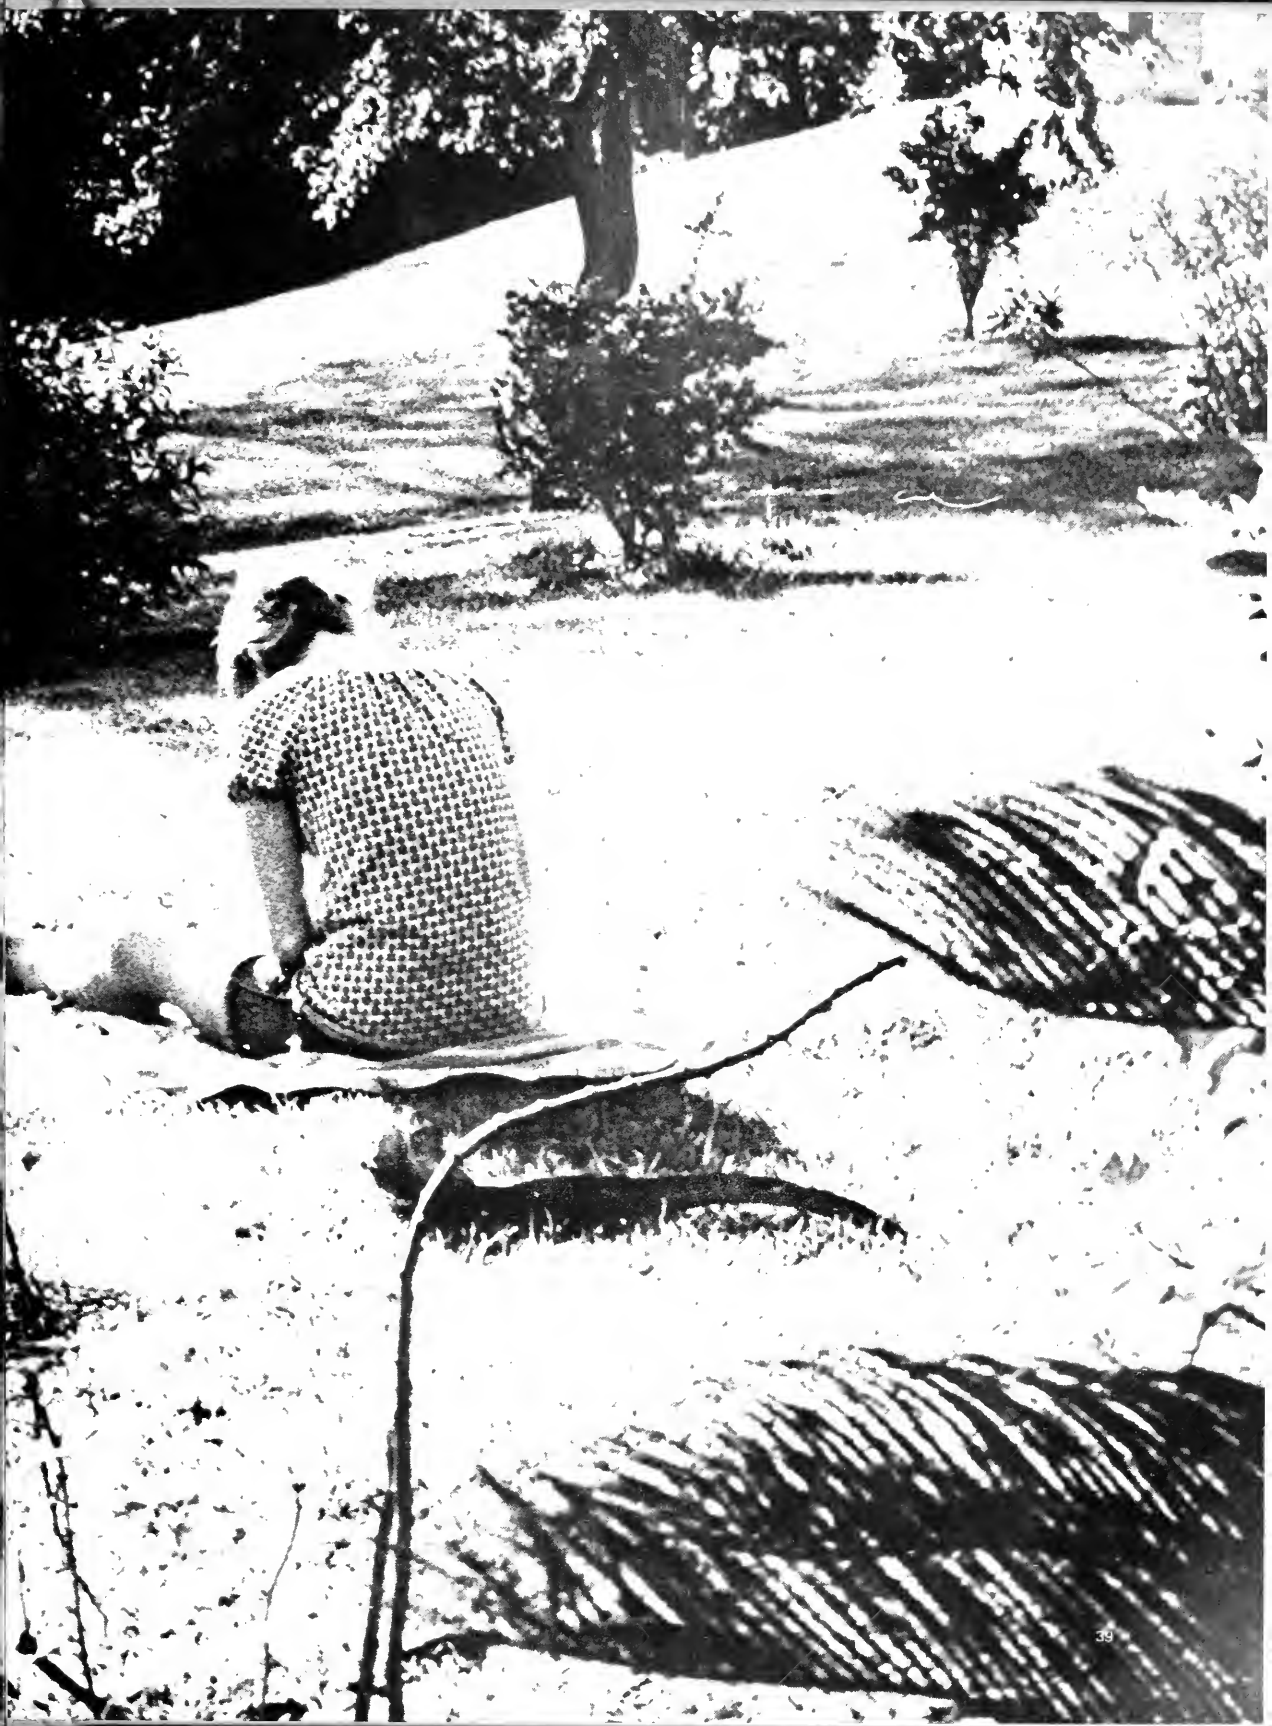

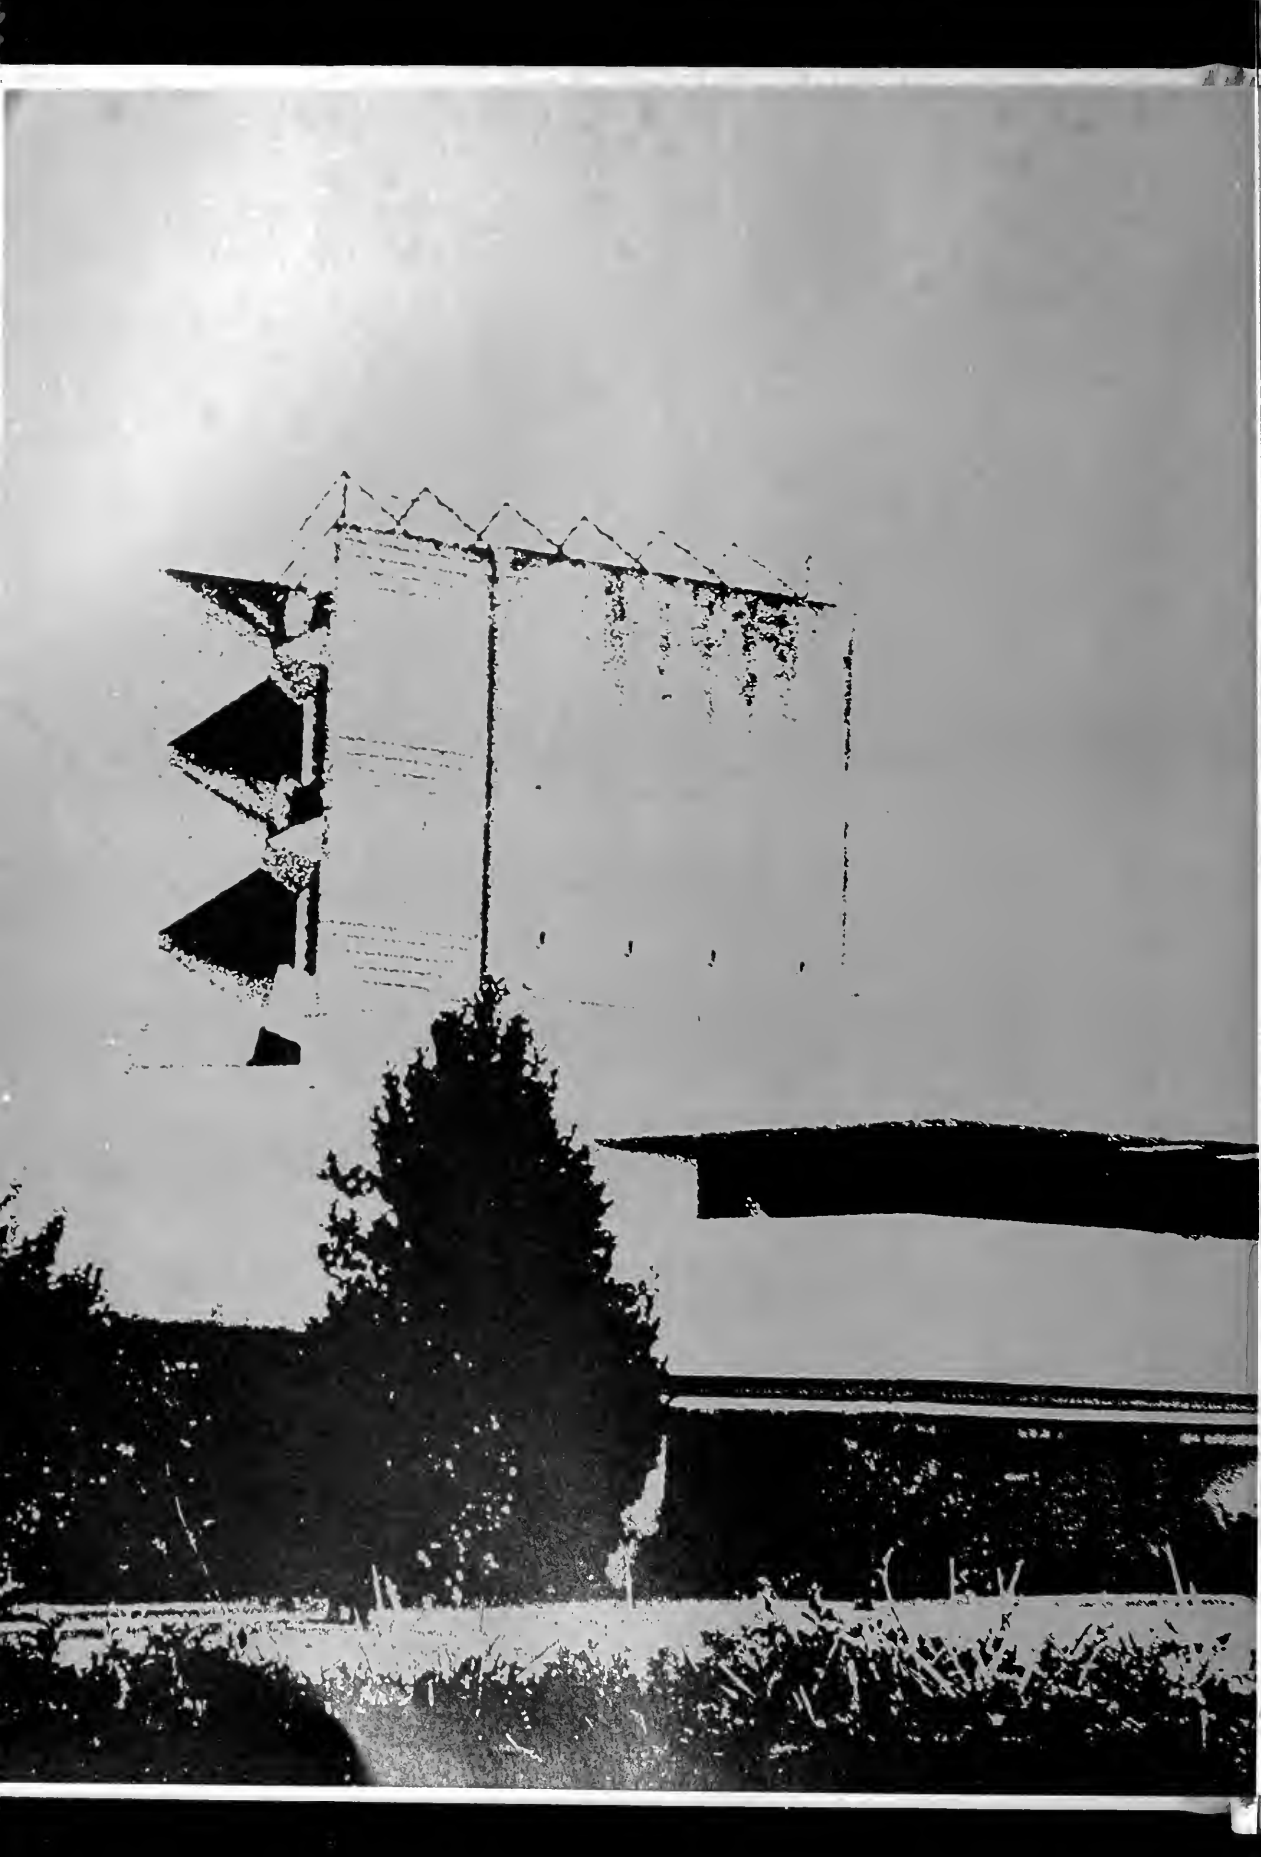

Do what you want to do —

PROFILES

When outsiders think of FSC, a picture of Annie Pfeiffer Chapel, typifying religion tied to modernism comes to mind.

Students know this is not a profile of the complete college. A profile of the college is a profile of the individual.

FSC is a training ground for living in the real world, and there is no building that can represent the true profile of Florida Southern.

Florida Southern is the GDI who calls Greeks "freaks" and would rather spend his time in labs and classes, doing as he chooses rather than having his free hours pre-planned.

The college profile includes the old professor who says what he wants to in class, because his tenure is established and only an act of God or the Board of Trustees could send him looking for another job.

It includes the young professor whose principles force him to expound his beliefs regardless of the consequences.

The athlete who lives for sports and barely keeps his athletic scholarship is part of the college profile. So is the student who doesn't know intramurals exist—the one whose fascination doesn't lie in a perfectly completed pass play, but in the structure of a cell, the makeup of a page, or the ability of a rat to go through a maze.

The profile includes students who seek an education to make a contribution to the world. It includes students who want to earn an M.R.S. degree as well as those who wish to capture every coed's heart and still remain aloof.

The profile has to include the student who is on every possible committee and in every possible club, as well as the individual who spends his free time thinking in the Hindu garden.

No, somehow Annie Pfeiffer doesn't say FSC. At least not from the viewpoint of the student. There is no single profile. Florida Southern is not just the Honor Walk student, Miss Southern, the beauties or the uglies.

The college profile is an intangible, undescrivable quality, different for, yet still including each person.

STRUCTURE

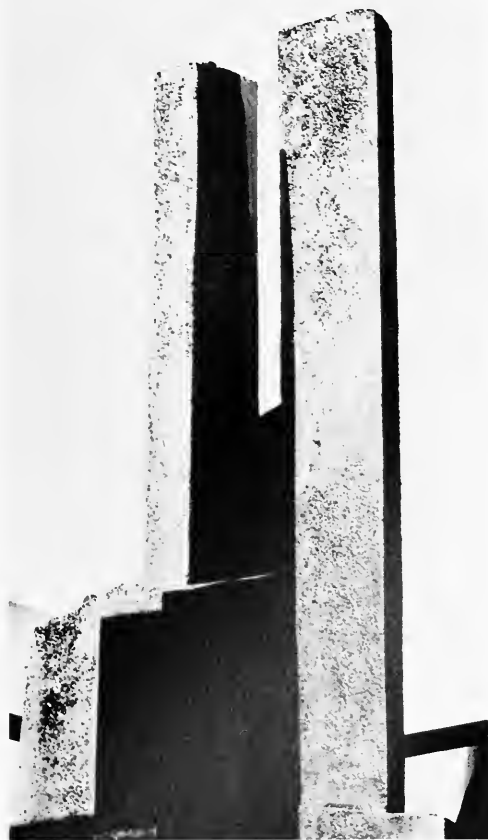

Almost everyone at Florida Southern is in some kind of organization. "Get involved," the freshman is told. So he does, and it has a snowball effect. He joins one or two clubs his freshman year and a few more his sophomore year. Then he decides to run for an office. By the time he reaches his senior year, his schedule consists of one meeting after another with homework in between.

At the beginning of the year, every organization has high goals and aspirations. Activity decreases as progs, papers and homework begin to pile up. Projects are half finished. Everybody cries for action, but there are often only a few willing to really work. The club member begins to wonder what happened to the good things he was going to do. He begins to curse the ones who harped, "Get involved."

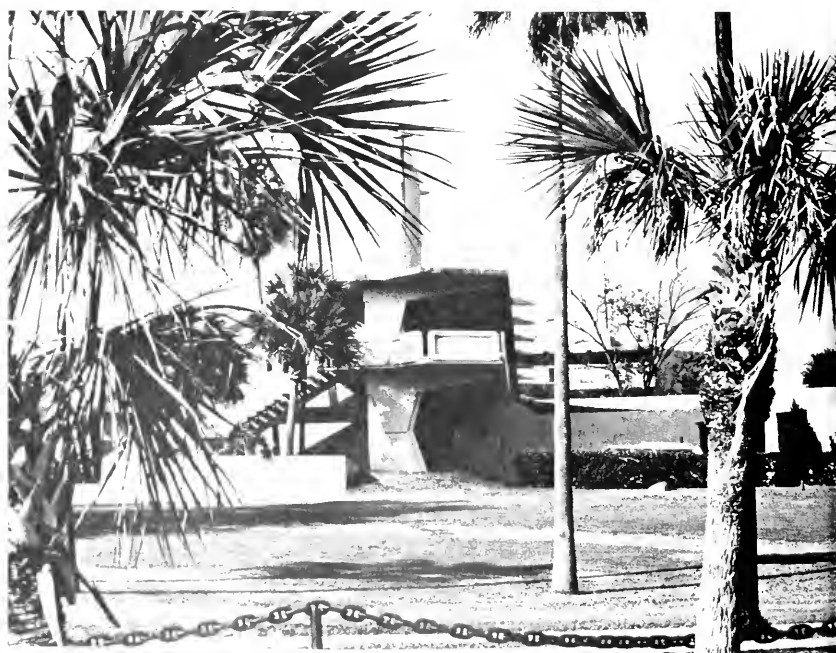

But due to some miraculous act, or more likely, the industriousness of some dedicated committee chairman, all the loose ends get tied together. Organization emerges from confusion as projects left undone from the previous semester are finished.

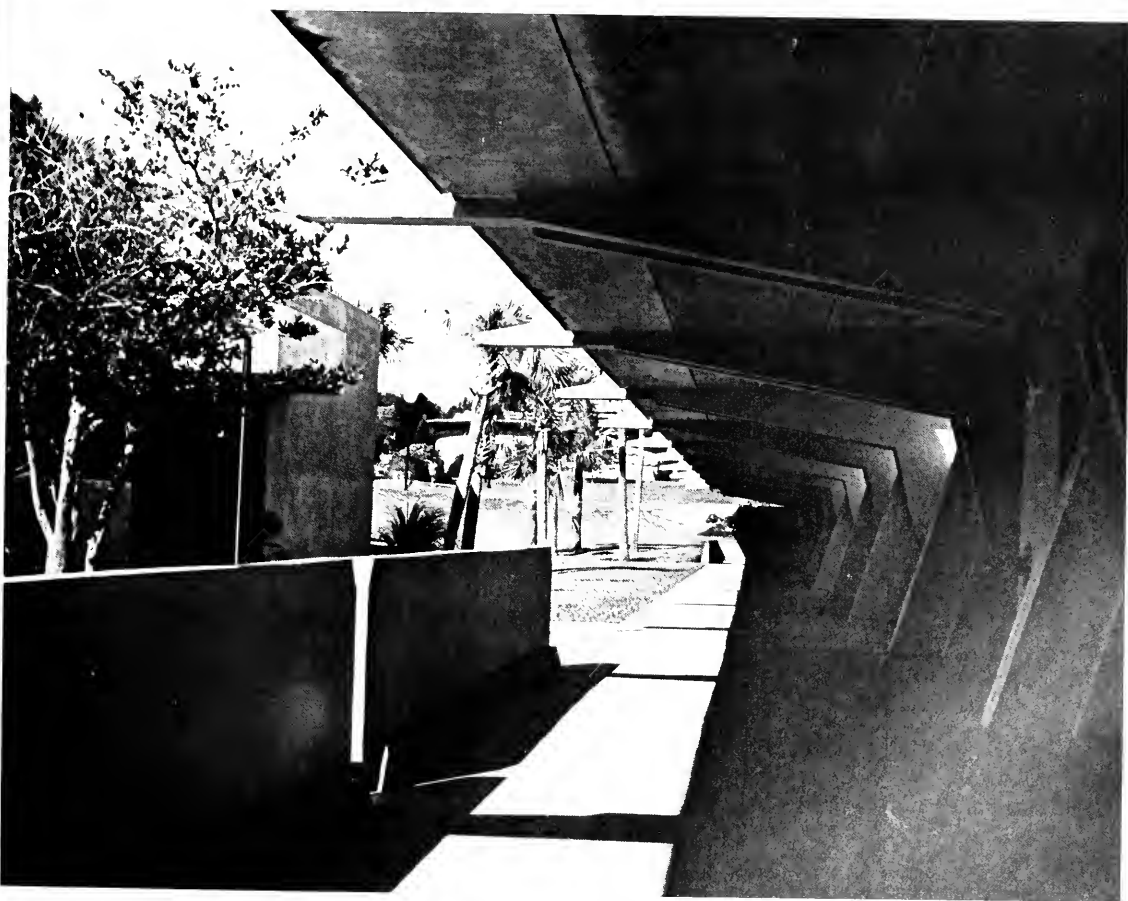

The members who joined just to meet people or have something to do have been weeded out. There remains a dedicated few who finish the job.

The end of the school year comes. Some of the hard workers graduate, minutes are filed away for the summer, and we wait for September. Next year, we'll finish all those things we didn't get around to.

BROTHERS and SISTERS

Sigma Chi, Alpha Chi, Pike, Pi Kap. Freshmen ponder in amazement over the strange names of the organizations that call themselves Greek.

They have heard that Greeks are snobby. Sororities and fraternities are expensive. Greeks are out for nothing but a good time. Greeks contribute nothing.

They find out that this isn't always true at Florida Southern.

The Greek family, like the conjugal family, has disagreements, arguments and debates. But like the conjugal family, each person has a function to fulfill, moral support, and a person to turn to with a question.

To an only child, a sorority or fraternity makes up for the lack of brothers and sisters in the family. A fraternity or sorority makes a person from a large family feel at home.

Unlike other schools, Greeks at Florida Southern are not dying. They are a vital part of campus life.

Being a Greek is more than paying dues and going to a weekly chapter meeting. It is good times and good works tied together through a philanthropic project.

It is competing and cooperating. Rush, intramurals, Greek Sing, Greek games, and Sigma Chi derby breed healthy competition among fraternities and sororities. But this is soon forgotten after pledges are picked up and the trophies are won.

It is then time for cooperation through the work of Greek Council, IFC and Panhellenic. The same Greeks who pulled against each other in the tug of war during Greek games are now working to develop a better rush system. The girls who didn't speak to each other during rush are helping the same child at the Cerebral Palsy clinic. The freshman who was dubious of Greeks is now a pledge. And he knows that his group is number one.

Competition and cooperation. It makes the Greek system work.

Sports is a mirror of life, and a vital part of Florida Southern

CHALLENGE

Sportswise, it was a year of challenge and championship. School spirit soared and attendance at all sports events picked up.

The FSC baseball team copped the NCAA championship trophy, and the spirit of success was transferred to the basketball Mocs whose victorious season culminated in an NCAA tournament bid.

Fraternities, sororities and independents vied for intramural victories which fed the spirit of competition. Individuals competed for a place on the team, and teams competed for first place in the leagues.

Competition did funny things to people. It made coeds drop their ladylike mannerisms and get dirty so that their team could win.

Fraternities and independents struggled against each other on the field and a simple intramural game became as important as the world series.

Spectators screamed for their team until they were hoarse. They couldn't have been more involved even if they were playing.

At FSC, sports is a way of life for many. It's a healthy break from books that fosters the cooperation and competition that are necessary in other areas of college life.

The goalie trying to keep his position on the soccer team dives valiantly toward the offensive ball. Sometimes, he'll retrieve it and send it far down the field as the onlookers either breathe easily once again, or moan in despair. Other times, he comes up with nothing but a faceful of dirt, a bloody nose and a feeling that he has let the entire team down.

Sports is a mirror of life, and a vital part of Florida Southern. As in life, sometimes we win, and sometimes we just get a kick in the face. But as long as we put forth an honest effort, winning or losing is immaterial.

Intramural Ignites The Spirit

Of Competition And Desire To Win

Aw, Ref . . .

You've got to be kiddin'!

*... the basic philosophy and personality of the college remain

CONTINUUM

A college is not a college if there are only buildings, books and lectures. Plays, concerts and research are a vital part of the learning process, but there can be no college if there are not students and administrators.

Looking at the liberal, modern architecture, one would think that Florida Southern is a liberal school. Looking at some administrators and students, it would seem that this is not so. Nothing ever seems to change. Or does it?

New things happen every day. Old rules are retired and new, more liberal ones take their place. Change seems slow and tedious; sometimes so minute that it is hard to see, but over the usual four year span of college, many changes take place.

The change in the college can be compared to the change of the student who comes here as a lowly freshman. His personality takes such abrupt turns at first that his family hardly recognizes him as the same individual when he goes home for Thanksgiving.

His dress, mannerisms and ideas have changed. Few people graduate from college the same person they were when they entered.

Yet the person like the college, retains his basic personality. The student's philosophy has undergone some alterations, yet he still clings to some of his old ideas. He may be more outgoing, more introspective or more thoughtful, but he is still the same person.

So it is with Florida Southern. The administration and college policies have undergone change, but the basic personality of the college is the same.

New techniques and discoveries are being uncovered in the Bio-research lab, but the researchers are still looking for what they set out to find; a cure for cancer.

Plays are being performed in a new theatre and by different students, but they are plays that were written several years—and sometimes centuries—ago.

Nudes are now shown in the art exhibits, as well as modernistic paintings, but the student artists use many of the same techniques that were used in the past.

Students come and go. The pattern is continued as underclassmen take up where the seniors left off. Faces change, classes change, but the process of education continues.

Convocation features more controversial speakers and presidential hopefuls, but the programs are still sometimes boring and roll is still taken.

Coeds can wear slacks to class and the curfew is extended, but the rules are still strict.

The college has undergone some personality changes, as have the students, administration and faculty, but the basic philosophy and personality of the college remain unaltered.

FLORIDA SOUTHERN COLLEGE

50th ANNIVERSARY · PARTNERS IN PROGRESS

FLORIDA SOUTHERN COLLEGE

The 1972 Interlachen is dedicated to a professor who has more energy than most students. His enthusiasm is apparent in the classroom; his spirit is shown at Southern basketball games; his sincerity is felt during conferences with individual students; his genuine interest in the school and a willingness to become involved are evident by his achievements. He will heartily enter a classroom asking everyone, "How's it going . . . And what happened on campus this weekend?" His drive is reinforced by a desire to see each student gain as much as possible from his years at Florida Southern College. He will do his best to make all students aware and encourage them to be active participants. For his incentives and devotion to students my awards for both spirit and achievement go to . . .
